The State Said to Have New Evidence.CAMDEN, June 25.—The cross-examination of Benjamin Hunter, who testified yesterday in his own behalf in the trial on the charge of murdering John M. Armstrong, was resumed this morning. The streets, court yard, and steps of the Court House were so densely thronged that the counsel had some difficulty in getting their way through, and the court was a little delayed on that account.

Before Hunter went on the stand, ex-Gov. Fallock of Pennsylvania, now Superintendent of the United States Mint, testified that the accused man had always been a most excellent reputation. Then Hunter took the witness seat and faced the Prosecutor. He seemed refreshed by the night's rest, and bowed politely to Prosecutor Jenkins when their eyes met.

"Did you make a memorandum in your diary of your visit to Mr. Epp?" asked the Prosecutor.

Hunter yesterday had sworn that he was in John Epp's house at the time of the murder. The Prosecutor claims that Hunter was at Epp's in the evening before the murder.

"Yes," said Hunter, "I made an entry that same evening."

"Why, then, did you make this entry under date of Tuesday, instead of Wednesday?" asked the Prosecutor, showing Hunter a diary that was found among his papers.

"Oh, I paid no attention to dates when I entered my memo. You see the diary is for 1875."

"Now," said the Prosecutor as he handed the diary to ex-Secretary Robeson, who closely examined it: "now, you were one of the guardians of a young man named Gutz, were you not?"

"Yes, I was. His share of the estate was due June 24 last. The money has not all been paid, but he has $3,000."

Some time after Hunter had given this answer, Prosecutor Jenkins asked him if he did not put the insurance policies on Armstrong's life into a lawyer's hands to collect three days after Armstrong's death, or on the 28th of January, the same day that his ward came of age and would demand his $5,000.

"Yes, I did; and I can explain why I did it." "You may explain when the time comes."

Subsequently Hunter said, in answer to a question from ex-Secretary Robeson, that he received a note from a lawyer saying that his friend Armstrong was dead, and that he had better have the policies collected. Then he gave the lawyer the policies collected. Then he gave
